

Andrei Țăranu - Political Science Expert

Vice Dean, Faculty of Political Science, National School of Political Studies and Public Administration, Bucharest.

Andrei Țăranu is a Romanian Associate Professor and Political Scientist, teaching at National School of Political Sciences and Public Administration Bucharest. He was a Fulbright Scholar at City University of New York, and Visiting Professor at Federico II Napoli, Italy. He was awarded as a Bologna Teacher by National Students Associations Organization. He was the Executive Director of the Institute for Popular Studies (political think tank).

His main topic is Political Ideologies and Political Symbolism. He wrote several books on Political Sciences and many articles on the issue of populism and neo-populism.

He was habilitated as a PhD coordinator in 2003 with a paper concerning the theories in populism as a new political ideology menace.